FAMOUS CASE RECALLED

Plaintiff Had Been Whipped as
Result of the Lula Joyner
Kidnapping.

Times-Dispatch Bureau,
109 North Sycamore Street,
Petersburg, Va., April 13.
A very interesting case, involving assault and false imprisonment, growing out of the kidnapping or mysterious disappearance of little Lula Joyner from her home near Church Road, in Dinwiddie county, about six years ago, was tried before Justice A. Watkins, at Ritchie's Store, in Dinwiddie, this afternoon. The complainant in the case was E. B. Sheffield, a well-known citizen of the county, represented in the prosecution by H. H. Mann, of this city, and the defendants were L. T. Branch, of Richmond, and a detective agency in that city and Dennis Roe, colored, an "operator" for that agency, who were represented by Isaac Diggs, of the Richmond bar. Lula Joyner was about four years old when she disappeared, and her mother, Mrs. Ida Joyner, died subsequently of grief for her lost child, who if alive now would be between ten and eleven years old. While the disappearance of the child has never been explained, the lapse of years has never lessened the interest of the people of the county in her fate, and every clue that has come to light has been followed to its end. The warrants against L. T. Branch and Dennis Roe charge that on the 24 day of December, 1908, they did unlawfully and violently assault and kidnap Lula Joyner, and did unlawfully imprison him from 4 to 6 o'clock in the afternoon of that day. By agreement of counsel, both parties were put on their trial together, and the justice overruled a motion of the defense to quash the warrants on the ground that there was no authority in law for their issuance.

Testimony in the Cases.
Twelve or fifteen witnesses were present to testify for the prosecution, several of them, however, being only corroborative in their evidence. It seemed from the statements made that a number of men—all strangers—were implicated in the alleged assault on Sheffield, who was suspected of having gone missing. Some of the witnesses testified that there were six or seven men in the party, and one that there were fourteen—the two defendants being identified among them.
B. F. Williams, one of the most prominent of the witnesses, identified both defendants. Some time before the alleged assault they had a conversation with Branch in Petersburg, meeting him by Branch's request. Branch represented himself as a detective. They talked about the Joyner case, which he thought had been badly managed, and which he wanted to work up right. Branch thought he could recover the child and suggested to witness that the only way to get at results would be to take E. B. Sheffield into the woods and hang him up.
Mr. Williams furnished some evidence for Branch. Afterwards, on the same day that Sheffield was taken to the woods, the two defendants and others came to the depot at Church

Road, and Sheffield with them, apparently very much frightened. Branch said to him that "that man (Sheffield) was guilty, and I am going to put him under arrest." Roe said he was Mr. Branch's "operator" in Richmond, and that other negroes were operating. The witness told Branch he did not believe that Sheffield was guilty of Lula Joyner's disappearance.

What Sheffield Testified.
E. B. Sheffield, the complainant, testified that he lived near Church Road. On the 24 day of December last I was at the farm of Mrs. Fannie McDonald, helping to thresh peanuts. While so engaged the defendant Roe and a white man (not Branch) came there and said they wanted to see me. They caught me by the arm, one on each side, and forced me to go with them. They hurried me to the woods, where there were six or eight other men gathered, the defendant Branch among them. They stopped me in the woods and tried to make me say that I knew who stole the child. They threw a rope over the limb of a tree and made a loop in the other end, and told me if I did not tell who stole the child they would hang me. Branch pulled out his watch and said I would be given three minutes in which to tell. They kept me there for some time. I did not know who stole the child and would not tell a lie. Branch said his name was Jordan, and that he was getting information to write up an article for the Washington Herald. Branch finally said they would turn me over to the sheriff. After keeping me in the woods until 8 o'clock they marched me to the depot, where I was told by Roe that I could go home, but the matter would be further investigated, and the men left on the train for Petersburg.

On being cross-questioned by Mr. Diggs, Sheffield said about four years ago he was arrested in connection with the Joyner case, but on trial was discharged. He said that last fall he told Branch that if he could have disguised himself after the girl's disappearance he believed he could have found her. Mr. Diggs asked if he knew where the girl was at that time. This question was objected to by Mr. Mann as immaterial, but was allowed by the justice after discussion. Sheffield declared that he did not know where the child was, whether he would have gone to find her, or who stole her, or where she is now, nor does he know anything of the manner of her disappearance. "If the girl refused to tell a lie with a rope around my neck, and under threats to hang me, I would not tell a lie now."

A number of the witnesses testified to seeing Roe and Branch as being present. The defendants were not placed on the stand, nor was any evidence offered in their behalf. Mr. Diggs said that the defendants are reputable detectives, and at the time were engaged in honestly endeavoring to ferret out a heinous crime—that of kidnapping a child. They believed they were doing right, and if the justice adjudged them guilty, there were mitigating circumstances that would justify a very light penalty.

Mr. Mann characterized their treatment of Sheffield as a grievous offense, which called for severe punishment. The justice adjudged the defendants guilty as charged in the warrants, and imposed a fine of $100 in each case, and sentenced each to six months' imprisonment in jail.

An appeal was taken to the Circuit Court and the two men gave bond.

Is Lula Joyner Alive?
Detective Branch, one of the defendants, after the trial, made positive announcement that the kidnapped Joyner girl is alive, but far away from here. He also asserts that the girl will be produced by the time his trial takes place in the Circuit Court. On what he bases this positive assertion he declines to say.

The discussion of law points between the opposing counsel was quite animated.

THREATENED BY FIRE.

Timely Arrival of Fire-Fighters Saves Kiln.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
NORFOLK, Va., April 13.—This morning at 9:15 o'clock threatened the destruction of the plant of the Portsmouth Lumber Company, located on the Berkeley side of the river, opposite the docks of the Old Dominion Steamship Company. The blaze started in dry kiln No. 9, and is said to have been caused from spontaneous combustion. The kilns are frame structures, and owing to a very high wind which was blowing at the time, the flames spread rapidly. That the entire plant would have gone up in smoke is certain had it not been for the timely arrival of the mill fire-fighters and the Berkeley Fire Department.

Norfolk County Ferries Worth Much More Than Ten Years Ago.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]

The city and county appraisers had set for the county ferries only $135,000, while the Traction Company representatives held out for $175,000. Judge McLemore, as referee, gave decision, and this was then made unanimous. The ferry was leased for a period of ten years at $135,200 annual rental.

He escaped without injury, and after the abandonment of the Merrimac went to Richmond, Va., where he became a contractor. Mr. Meads came to Washington from Virginia just after the surrender at Richmond and established himself in the contracting business, which he carried on until the death of his wife about three years ago. He never fully recovered from that sorrow and retired from business, being then nearly seventy years of age. Mr. Meads was prominent in the early improvement of the Capital Hill section, having built many of its best residences and business houses. During the latter part of his business career he was engaged extensively on government and city work.

YOUNG WOMAN IS HELD FOR MURDERFinding of Infant's Body in Woods Is Followed by Her Arrest.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
ORANGE, Va., April 13.—A small boy, while looking for turkey nests in the woods upon the farm of W. W. Sanford, near Madison Run, noticed the dog he had with him scratching after something in the leaves, and after investigation found a dead white twelve-pound infant. The coroner and sheriff were notified, and immediately went to the spot. After a post-mortem examination the coroner was convinced that a murder had been committed. The sheriff summoned a jury and a number of witnesses.

Suspicion having rested upon a family named Reynolds, consisting of father, mother and two daughters, aged twenty and twenty-one, they were summoned to appear before the coroner's jury at Orange. The father and mother of the suspected girls appeared, but the young women were not on hand. The sheriff, after a search located the suspected parties at Gordonsville, placed them under arrest and brought them to Orange. After examination of all the witnesses before the coroner's jury, a warrant was issued for Virginia Reynolds, charging her with the murder of the infant. She was brought before Justice Frank B. Perry and held for the sum of $200 for her appearance before the justice for trial next Saturday at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon.

WILL KNOW THURSDAY.

Sam Hardy Will Then Be Told If He Is to Have Another Chance.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
SUFFOLK, Va., April 13.—Sam Hardy, convicted of first degree murder for killing Tiberius G. Jones at Holland October 25 last, will know next Thursday whether or not he may have another chance for his life. Circuit Judge McLemore having announced to-day that he will then deliver his opinion on the motion for an arrest of judgment, and a new trial, which was argued March 19 and 20.

The court's opinion, of about 3,500 words, fills ten pages of legal cap paper. The public feels great concern as to the purport of the opinion. Judge McLemore said to-night that he had been questioned hundreds of times here and in Norfolk, where he also presides, as to when the ruling would be rendered.

Counsel for the defense based their motion for a new trial on the contention that the jury was improperly allowed to witness moving picture films projecting tragic scenes, and that the evidence proving the deceased had come to Suffolk on the day of the tragedy to purchase a picture, was against Hardy in connection with his testimony in the Zachary Taylor-Holland will case should not have been admitted, and that the venire facias was illegal.

MURDEROUS ASSAULT.

Negroes Enter Home and Attack the Housekeeper.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
RALEIGH, N. C., April 13.—Hannah Harris, a negro cook, was lodged in jail this morning on the charge of having entered the residence of A. Dugli, a well-known Italian merchant here, and attempted to murder his housekeeper, Mrs. John C. Crosswell, of McDowell county. Mrs. Crosswell's throat was badly but not fatally cut as she struggled with her assailant in the darkness after being awakened from her sleep and threatened with death if she made any outcry.

About all that Mrs. Crosswell knows of her assailant is that it was a woman. There are witnesses who saw a negro woman dressed as the Harris negro running up Hillsboro Street right after the outcry was made from the Dugli residence. When the Harris woman was arrested, about a half-hour later, the evidence is that she had been in her house, three squares from the Dugli residence, only about twenty minutes. The police have they say very strong evidence against the Harris negro that has not been made public.

She was a cook in this morning on home for a long while, until Mrs. Crosswell was employed as housekeeper. The Dugli residence is on Hillsboro Street, one of the very best residential sections of the city. Mrs. Crosswell is reported to-day as in a serious condition. However, it is not thought that the wound will prove fatal.

They Drill Hole in Postmaster's Safe, but Fail to Get It Open.

[Special to The Times-Dispatch.]
ROANOKE, Va., April 13.—A bold attempt was made early this morning to crack the safe in Postmaster Funkhouser's private office. James Cooper, the colored janitor, and W. E. Wortley, a clerk, were in the post-office at the time, but heard no noise in the room. About 3:30 the janitor went into the office to close it, and when he discovered the window open and the furniture disarranged, he telephoned the postmaster, who came to the office. Then it was discovered that the burglar had drilled a hole in the safe at the lock and the workmanship showed plainly that it was the work of a professional.

There was very little money in the safe at the time. Post-Office Inspector Mosby and the police are working on the case, but have no clue, as neither was taken from the office or left by the burglars.
